Transmission Mounts

On automatic equipped cars 1956 to 1966, there is a ½" thick spacer on the rear motor mount on the left, or the driver's side. We don't know why it is there, only that it is supposed to be there.

Many times, the old mount will have sagged, become soft and pressed down around this spacer. When the mount is changed, the spacer sticks to the old mount and is hidden under grease, grime and dirt. It often is thrown away and the new mount is used without it.

When this happens, the shifter on the steering post does not line up properly and the throttle pressure control rod is way out of adjustment and your shift points are not where they should be. Do not forget to re-install that spacer when it has been removed.
